

Here's Why Rapper Tekashi 6ix9ine Might Get Murdered Inside And Outside Prison Bars

theinnersane.com/2019/11/03/heres-why-rapper-tekashi-6ix9ine-might-get-murdered-inside-and-outside-

November 3,
2019

The rapper Tekashi 6ix9ine is probably not safe outside the walls of the prison. He was facing a possible life sentence before he agreed to be a cooperating witness. This is regarding the racketeering trial of Anthony “Harv” Ellison and Aljermiah “Nuke” Mack — alleged gang members. He pleaded guilty to nine counts in the federal criminal case against Nine Trey. However, he will get a reduced sentence and may even be out of prison by 2020.

According to an expert witness specializing in criminal gangs of the United States, Lisa Taylor-Austin, he’s not safe behind bars. The 23-year-old rapper wants to avoid as much jail time as he can. His desire isn’t outside the realm of possibility. Julie Rendelman, a criminal attorney in New York, believes Tekashi’s controversial testimony could change those daunting numbers. Stay tuned to find out his reduced prison sentence and whether or not he is safe.

Being a Cooperative Witness

6ix9ine chose to cooperate against others as it's likely the only way to avoid a lengthy prison sentence. The prosecutor will present to Tekashi's sentencing judge, once his cooperation's complete, how honest, helpful they believe he was. He can be eligible for supervised release (parole) within the next year.

His sentence depends "on the specifics of his plea and agreement". He offered $20,000 to rapper Kooda B to shoot one of his rivals, rapper Chief Keef. Tekashi claimed he committed several crimes during his time with Nine Trey Gangsta. His testimony about the nine tray gangsta types of blood is very uncommon. He will be a target now as he has been labeled a snitch.

Federal Protection of 6ix9ine

Many federal facilities, in terms of protection, are equipped to handle those individuals who are in danger from other inmates. The protection's based on the type of crime they've committed or the fact that they are cooperating against others. Well, many are wondering if he'll join the U.S. governments' witness protection program. Tekashi 6ix9ine is hard to miss with his rainbow hair and more than 200 tattoos. It's unlikely the United States Marshals Service would pay for the removal of Mr. Hernandez's signature face tattoos.

